CLINICAL WORKFLOW FIT

Choose by the clinical problem in front of you.

Laschal instruments are most useful where direct finger access, visibility, or force control limits the procedure.

01

File control and pre-curving

Bend, place, and manipulate files with less finger crowding when anatomy or microscope angle limits direct access.

02

Separated instrument retrieval

Use angled probes and Steiglitz forceps as a sequence for exposing, troughing, and removing fragments.

03

Retreatment and gutta percha removal

Keep retreatment instruments organized by direction and movement so removal remains visible and controlled.

04

Microsurgical access and closure

Needle holders, scissors, tissue forceps, and suture support instruments round out the endodontic surgical setup.

FEATURED INSTRUMENTS

Core Laschal pathways for endodontic access and retrieval.

PART NUMBER: 90AHF/L, 75CHF/L, EF-1-7

Tactile endo file forceps

CLINICAL PROBLEM

Deep posterior access and microscope positioning can make small files difficult to control with fingers alone.

LASCHAL SOLUTION

Diamond-coated file forceps place file handling into a slim instrument profile for angled, tactile access.

KEY FEATURES

- 75 or 90 degree access options
- Diamond-coated working surfaces
- ThumLok® handle variants

CLINICAL BENEFITS

- Improves file control under magnification
- Reduces finger crowding around the access
- Supports controlled placement in difficult anatomy

PART NUMBER: FBF

Endodontic file bender

CLINICAL PROBLEM

Negotiating complex canal anatomy often requires a repeatable pre-curve rather than a rough hand bend.

LASCHAL SOLUTION

The file bender supports short, gradual, acute, elongated, and deeper bends in endodontic files.

KEY FEATURES

- Flat-handle bending control
- Multiple curvature styles
- Compact chairside format

CLINICAL BENEFITS

- Helps preserve intended file path
- Supports controlled negotiation
- Pairs naturally with tactile file forceps

PART NUMBER: FXP/S, FXP/45, FXP/75, FXP/90, FXP/110

FXP file extraction protocol

CLINICAL PROBLEM

Separated instruments can require a narrow, controlled retrieval pathway without over-enlarging dentine.

LASCHAL SOLUTION

Angled diamond excavation probes and Steiglitz forceps create a staged pathway for ultrasonic troughing and retrieval.

KEY FEATURES

- 45, 75, 90, and 110 degree probe options
- Probe bender support
- Steiglitz forceps pairing

CLINICAL BENEFITS

- Supports a conservative retrieval strategy
- Keeps access choices visible
- Gives clinicians a repeatable protocol sequence

PART NUMBER: SET-GP

Gutta percha removal set

CLINICAL PROBLEM

Retreatment requires removal of gutta percha while preserving visibility and avoiding unnecessary canal disruption.

LASCHAL SOLUTION

A directional removal set uses scraper-style instruments that can be pre-heated for controlled gutta percha removal.

KEY FEATURES

- Four directional instruments
- Sterile tray organization
- Optional heat support

CLINICAL BENEFITS

- Keeps the working field organized
- Supports controlled scraping movement
- Fits a retreatment-focused EndoTech workflow

PART NUMBER: 45-S/L, 75-SP/L

Raptor post and root-tip forceps

CLINICAL PROBLEM

Posts, points, and small fragments often need narrow access with force delivered only where it is useful.

LASCHAL SOLUTION

Raptor forceps use a slim, durable tip profile for controlled gripping in tight endodontic and surgical spaces.

KEY FEATURES

- 45 and 75 degree options
- N/S and E/W orientation choices
- Narrow carbide tip geometry

CLINICAL BENEFITS

- Improves approach options
- Supports low-force grip control
- Extends the endodontic set beyond canal instrumentation
